ELIO’S LITTLE DISCOVERIES

The Same Rain

같은 비

Rain began before breakfast. It tapped the window and ran down the glass in long, clear lines. Bori pressed her bill to the pane and sighed. Today was the day they had planned a picnic by the pond.

“It is raining,” she said. “The bread is ready, the blanket is ready, and the rain does not care about our picnic.” Elio looked out too. The garden had turned grey and soft.

Mum came in with wet boots and a basket of beans. “Listen,” she said. “That is the best sound of the week.” She opened the door and let the rain smell into the kitchen.

“Best?” said Bori. “It is wet and cold, and it has spoiled our day.” Mum set down her basket. “My beans are in the ground,” she said. “They were waiting for this.”

Elio looked from Bori to Mum. They were standing in the same kitchen, listening to the same rain, and they heard two different things. “So the rain is good and bad,” he said.

“Not good and bad,” said Mum. “It is good for the beans and bad for the picnic. Both are true.” Bori folded her wings. She had wanted one answer, and now there were two.

“Can we have the picnic inside?” asked Elio. “We could put the blanket on the floor.” Bori looked at the window. “It is not the same,” she said. “The pond is outside.”

Mum did not tell her to be happy about the rain. She put on the kettle and set three cups on the table. “We can wait,” she said. “Rain often stops. And if it does not, we can choose again.”

By afternoon the rain grew thin. A drop fell from the eaves, then another, and then the garden was quiet. Bori ran to the door and looked out at the wet grass.

The path was muddy, but the pond was full and bright. Mum walked to her beans and lifted one wet leaf. “Look,” she said. “They stood up again.” Bori looked at the shiny leaves.

“I still wanted the picnic,” said Bori. “I know,” said Mum. “And I still wanted the rain. We can both be right about the same sky.” Elio spread the blanket on the dry porch.

They ate their bread on the porch, listening to the last drips. The beans drank. The pond shone. Bori ate one slice and said, “Next time, I will bring an umbrella.”

함께 발견해요

읽기 전

표지의 비 내리는 창과 식탁을 함께 보고, 비 오는 날 좋아하는 것과 싫은 것을 하나씩 말해 봐요.

함께 읽을 때

엄마의 말과 보리의 말을 번갈아 짚으며 읽어요. 두 사람이 같은 비를 보면서 무엇을 각각 생각했는지 찾아봐요.

생각 나누기

엄마는 왜 비가 반가웠나요? 보리는 왜 속상했나요? 둘 중 한 사람만 맞다고 정하지 않고, 각자의 이유를 원문에서 하나씩 찾아봐요.

생활에서

오늘 날씨를 함께 보고, 같은 날씨를 좋아할 사람과 싫어할 사람을 생각해 봐요. 아이의 느낌을 바꾸려 하지 않고 먼저 들어 줘요.

관점과 근거를 비교하는 긴 함께 읽기 원고 초안이에요. 독립 읽기 인증이나 관점 이해 평가가 아니에요.
