ELIO'S LITTLE DISCOVERIES

Is It a Weed?

이건 잡초일까?

Between the bean rows, small blue flowers had opened overnight. Bori knelt on the path to look at them. “They are so beautiful,” she said.

Mum came down the path with a basket and a short hand fork. “That one is a weed,” she said. “It drinks the water the beans need.”

“It has flowers,” said Bori. “A weed is a plant nobody wants, and I want this one, so it is a flower. Flowers should stay.”

Mum pulled one plant out and laid it on the path. Its root was long and white, and dark soil clung to every part of it.

“Look at the beans beside it,” said Mum. “Their leaves are pale and thin, and the soil is dry where this plant drank first.”

Bori looked more slowly. The bean leaves beside the flowers were pale and small, while the flowers were bright and easy to see. She did not know what to say.

A bee came and sat on a blue flower. Then another came, and another. Bori counted four bees in one minute, ticking them off on her wing tips.

“The bees need the flowers,” said Bori. “If we pull every plant out, the bees will go somewhere else to eat, and we will have fewer flowers next year.”

Elio looked along the row, then at the bare fence. “There are beans here and flowers there,” he said. “What if we moved the flowers to the fence?”

Mum dug the three plants from between the bean rows, and the children carried them to the fence one by one.

“I do not know if they will grow,” said Mum. “Some plants hate to be moved.” Bori gave them water anyway and pressed the soil down.

Two weeks later, three of the plants had new blue flowers by the fence. The bean rows stood tall in the sun, and the bees came to the flowers there.
